A BRIEF HISTORY OF GREAT NECK

Great Neck is a community of beautiful homes and also a place of high historic interest. There are probably fewer spots on Long Island where the past and the present are so closely interwoven.

Here the Algonquin Indians held sway and these sagacious redskins were leaders in the pleasant pursuits of the chase and the art of making wampum.

History tells us that the first white man to set his eyes upon what is known as Great Neck was one Adrian Block, a captain of the Great Dutch West India Company. Shortly after landing at Great Neck his vessel burned to the water-line which was a contributing factor to Adrian Block’s settling here permanently and becoming the first and foremost captain of industry, opening a fur trading post.

At first the natives were disgruntled but soon overcame their aversion to “Dutch Gold.” There were flare ups from time to time. However, they soon merged into the new social order and the red men vanished from their once isolated Eden.

Some three hundred years ago the worthy Dutch began their exodus from Manhattan and the same has been going on since. In the meantime, however, the British made their claim and settled here also.

In 1660 George Hewlett of Hempstead bought of Richard Brudnell, one of the original Dutch grantees, a large piece of land on Madnan’s Neck (now known as King’s Point and Kennilworth). Part of this patent later came to be the Harriet Smith estate. The First George Hewlett was born in England in 1634 and died here in 1722. He had three sons. His son, George 2nd, settled on the land in Madnan’s Neck.

Near the cottage on the Smith Farm (afterward the Titus estate and then the property of Mme. Petrova) once stood a house of stone and brick and which was torn down about fifty years ago. The bricks used in this building were imported as ship ballast and bore the date of 1640. Probably one of the oldest houses in Great Neck was the original part of the building on the farm of Mrs. L. U. Skidmore which was the residence of her daughter Mrs. Eldridge in Saddle Rock. This house was close to the mill pond on the south side and about 70 yards east of the Old Mill. This is where Henry Allen lived after he bought the land from Richard Thorne in 1698. Two other very old houses on the Neck are the Ames house (on the Woolley Estate) and the building on the west side of Mitchell’s Creek dating from the early 1700’s. Parts of the W. R. Grace mansion are also very ancient. This was originally the Adam Mott homestead.

In the early history of Great Neck, land was granted to individuals by vote of town authorities. A large part of Madnan’s Neck was so granted, but as late as around 1700 there were pieces of land known as “Common lands.” Some of these original grantees held a large acreage which later on they proceeded to sell off in smaller divisions.

That portion of Madnan’s Neck lying north of a line drawn from the west end of Beach Road and running easterly to Cow Bay (Manhasset) according to an ancient map, was divided into the following portions: 1st Division, 2nd Division, 3rd Division, Jackson’s Division and Haviland’s Land; Haviland’s Land was all of that lying north of the Ballantine estate and a continuation of this line in an easterly direction to the mouth of “Mill River” (afterwards Red Brook” and now Mitchell’s Creek). A deed dated 1672 shows that William Haviland was in possession from that date until, at least 1697 when another deed records the sale of “200 acres” including one held of Mill River Creek at Haviland’s for the sum of 700 pounds, sterling. In 1757 all this land including the point was again sold, this time to Jos. L. Hewlett and is shown on old charts thereafter as Hewlett’s Point.

Then after Mr. John A. King bought some land on the extreme point, this section gradually came to be called, as it is today. “King’s Point.” Jackson’s Division included Elm Point, Grenwolde and the former Gilbert property which became the estate of Harry F. Sinclair. (Continued on page 7)

2d Division ran from this parcel east to "The Great Swamp" and then south and west to "The Mill Dam." 3d Division contained the old Jagger, Roesler and Harriet Smith estates and lands on the other side of Red Brook Rd. owned by Wm. Quinn, Morgan Grace, Dr. Eden, etc.

Red Brook Rd. was once known as "Bog Meadow Rd." and in the year 1711 when Henry Allen was chosen "Keeper of the Gates & Fences," he had gates hung on this thoroughfare to keep cattle and such from straying into this one "wet spot" of the village.

The Revolutionary War found the inhabitants of these parts in a quandary as to where their best interest lay. There were no engagements of major importance fought in this neighborhood after the famous battle of Long Island and General Washington's masterly retreat to the mainland in the summer of 1776; but for eight years thereafter the people of Great Neck suffered deep privations; especially the families of these stalwart patriots who had sacrificed all to join the ragged Continentals. The arrogant English army under General Howe occupied the choicest land and billeted hireling Hessian troops. Some of the finest fields and forests were laid waste to supply these troops with grain and firewood for their officers.

Great Neck probably numbers among its residents more nationally known people than any other community of its size in America.

Good train service, with attractive highly restricted developments close by the station, churches, schools with a fine reputation, stores of all descriptions, including leading chain stores, proximity to the Sound and Country Clubs offering all varieties of land diversions, leave almost nothing to be desired.

Free education in Great Neck was formally organized on April 28, 1813 when, at a town meeting, a Superintendent and Commissioners and Inspectors of Common Schools were appointed. The first school was built near Woolley's Brook and after a few years, a second building was erected across from the Village Green. This building was destroyed by fire and a third constructed on the corner of Fairview Avenue and Middle Neck Road.

At the present time there are approximately 8,162 pupils in the Great Neck Public Schools, which is a contrast to 497 in 1912. All buildings are modern and well equipped; the programs are flexible and in tune with the sound principles of modern education.

Great Neck is a composite of nine incorporated villages made up as follows: Great Neck Estates, Kensington, Russell Gardens, Thomaston, Saddle Rock, King's Point, Great Neck Village, Great Neck Plaza and Lake Success. At the present time, the Villages are governed by the elected and appointed officers appearing on page 10.
